Each of the three identical sessions will focus on identifying potential solutions concerning mobility, livability and economics in the Dallas urban core. The meetings will be held in an open format to provide opportunities for participants to collaborate, share information and create innovative and forward-thinking concepts. The goal of the sessions is to identify neighborhood redevelopment, preservation and transportation ideas that will frame a comprehensive vision policymakers can use in making decisions about transportation projects and the city of Dallas' future.

In 1998, TxDOT conducted a major transportation study (MTIS). Many of the goals and objectives of the original MTIS have been accomplished, however over the past 17 years much has changed in Dallas and the region. Dallas CityMAP is an assessment of the changes and implications associated with previous, current and future major transportation and community investments. Information and input from the sessions and workshops will be used to create strategies that will identify practical transportation and urban design solutions, construction and funding feasibility. Each scenario will promote a vision and demonstrate both tangible and intangible benefits to Dallas communities within the urban core.
